Assessing deep learning and the development of skills, values and attitudes:

Deep learning refers to self-efficacy and genuine understanding - active participatory learning. It goes beyond the acquisition of knowledge and embraces understanding and the application of skills, values and attitudes. Teachers should ask themselves:

- What must be assessed? And why?
- How will I assess this learning?
- What aspects can the learners themselves evaluate through self or peer assessment?
- How can learners be supported to reflect purposefully on these assessments?
- What will I do with my results? Do my learners need further opportunities outside the Global Storyline to develop the particular skill/ value/ attitude?
- On return to character (and vice versa) - can my learners transfer their newly developing cognitive and/or personal skill to the story context?
